Introduction

Final count for the 2011 Tokelau Census of Population and Dwellings contains final population counts and dwelling counts based on information collected in the 2011 Tokelau Census of Population and Dwellings. The final count includes three different population concepts. These are: the de jure usually resident population, the usually resident population present in Tokelau on census night, and the census night population.

The Tokelau population has a unique composition. A significant proportion of the population temporarily leaves the islands (eg for healthcare, education). In 2011, core demographic information for people who usually live in Tokelau but were away on census night was completed on their behalf by the head of the household.

Comparison of absentee numbers over two censuses is limited as the number of people absent from Tokelau continually fluctuates. Appropriate population measures were developed for the 2006 Tokelau Census to ensure all usual residents were counted – including those who were not present in Tokelau on census night. This methodology was repeated for 2011.

The final dwelling count includes private, occupied dwellings. In Tokelau, some people sleep in sub dwellings that usually surround the main dwelling. The census counts only the main dwelling. The main dwelling often, but not always, houses the families' cooking, washing, or living facilities and is the unit in which most household activity takes place.

Users of Tokelau census data can be confident comparing census data between 2006 and 2011. However, final population and dwelling count comparisons are not recommended before 2006. Inconsistencies in collection methodology and population count calculations mean data from censuses earlier than 2006 is not directly comparable with 2011 Census data.

Final population counts

1. De jure usually resident population count

The de jure usually resident population of Tokelau was 1,411.

This count is of major interest to Tokelauan users, as it will be used for distributing funds to the three atolls.

The de jure population includes the usually resident population present in Tokelau on census night (1,143) and the usually resident absentee sub-population (268).

2. Usually resident population present in Tokelau on census night

The usually resident population present in Tokelau on census night was 1,143.

3. Census night population count

On 18 October 2011, there were 1,205 people in Tokelau. This figure includes all people present in Tokelau on census night, including overseas visitors. People absent from Tokelau on census night were not included in this total.

Population count definitions

De jure usually resident population

The de jure population count consists of the usually resident population present in Tokelau on census night plus usual residents who were temporarily overseas at the time of the census. This includes Tokelauan Tokelau Public Service (TPS) employees based in Apia and their immediate families.

Usually resident population present in Tokelau on census night

The usually resident population present in Tokelau on census night is a count of all people who usually live in Tokelau, and were present in Tokelau on census night. This count excludes visitors from overseas and residents who were temporarily overseas on census night.

Residents who were away from their usual address (ie on another atoll), but were in Tokelau on census night are counted as part of the population of the atoll where they usually live. This ensures they form part of the usually resident population present in Tokelau on census night for their home atoll.

Census night population

The census night population count gives a snapshot of the population at a point in time. It is the number of people at the place where they were interviewed on census night. This count includes overseas visitors as well as visitors from elsewhere in Tokelau. It excludes Tokelau residents temporarily overseas.

Planning for the 2011 Census

Local representatives and Statistics New Zealand staff conducted the 2011 Tokelau Census on 18 October 2011. Significant planning went into how data for the 2011 Tokelau Census would be collected and how the results would be published. Officials consulted on various aspects of the census (for example questionnaire content consultation) in Tokelau, Samoa, and where appropriate, New Zealand.

The 2011 Tokelau Census questionnaire was similar to the 2006 version (based on a standard form developed by the Secretariat of the Pacific Community). Two new topics were added to the 2011 questionnaire and some minor questionnaire improvements were made. Further information

In early 2012, Statistics New Zealand will publish further information releases based on data from the 2011 Tokelau Census.
